I believe that being a Christian means sticking up for your beliefs, even when it can be hard, especially in this day and age. I find it hard to be in a conversation about religion with people who have no faith, and not be “that guy.” You have to find a way to get your point across but still show that you accept their belief too. Of all places, I’m very glad that I have the church to support me. St. Paul’s is a community of people who support me in my faith, which is always a good place to be. I’m very thankful that you guys accept me and all of my weirdness. I especially thank P. Scott and all of my other teachers, my class, my family, and Karly. In confirmation class, we learned that people are awesome, so thank you all for being awesome and supporting my fellow classmates and me in our Christian education. This would also usually be the time to thank my parents for dragging me out of bed every Sunday to go to church, so I guess I’ll do that too.

In the future, I plan to be involved in St. Paul’s by attending church and Sunday school, acolyting, and volunteering with vacation bible school and other events.
